

A Meeting for Mid-Atlantic Residuals and Biosolids Stakeholders
August 5, 1997 @ Noon
PHIC

WELCOME! And thank you for taking the time to assist with the development of a stronger voice in Mid-Atlantic Region in support of the recycling of biosolids and other organic residuals. There are many individuals and organizations in Mid-Atlantic region working hard at properly managing and supporting biosolids and other organic residuals recycling programs. We all put in extra time and energy trying to convince the public that well-managed biosolids/residuals recycling programs are safe and beneficial to society. And, on the whole, we have managed to make considerable progress. But many are convinced that a more coordinated effort could produce even finer results. It should be possible to have a wide variety of organizations -- environmental, civic, gardening, farming, conservation, governmental, and more -- working with us as advocates of properly-managed biosolids/residuals recycling programs. If we can coordinate our responses to misinformation, and speak as one voice with consistency from the sound technical knowledge base that we have as a group, biosolids/residuals recycling could be as widely accepted here our region, as it is in the Northwest.

AGENDA

1. Introductions -- identify stakeholders and their affiliations
2. List major areas of concern in the following categories, with reports from different states
 - a. Recent crises (CNN, organic farmers, Oakhurst & Other dairies, etc.)
 - b. Regulatory status in the mid-Atlantic region, states, counties, and municipalities
 - c. Research underway currently, and proposed research needs
 - d. Public education needs
 - f. Other
3. Northwest Biosolids Management Association - what is it? Can it serve as a model?
4. Does the Mid-Atlantic region have the potential for a similar organization? Brainstorm strengths and weaknesses of existing structures and systems.

5. Concept proposal for a Mid-Atlantic Residuals & Biosolids Recycling Association

PROPOSAL

Mid-Atlantic Biosolids and Residuals Recycling Association

The following proposal is submitted to those present with the understanding that it will serve to get discussions started and help keep the group focused towards mutually-agreeable actions. The hope is to determine what priorities are acceptable to all, so that a mission statement and goals can be finalized soon. This will allow a fledgling organization to take some small, simple actions immediately; gain some successes; and build upon them.
